

Early Journal Content on JSTOR, Free to Anyone in the World

This article is one of nearly 500,000 scholarly works digitized and made freely available to everyone in the world by JSTOR.

Known as the Early Journal Content, this set of works include research articles, news, letters, and other writings published in more than 200 of the oldest leading academic journals. The works date from the mid-seventeenth to the early twentieth centuries.

We encourage people to read and share the Early Journal Content openly and to tell others that this resource exists. People may post this content online or redistribute in any way for non-commercial purposes.

Read more about Early Journal Content at <http://about.jstor.org/participate-jstor/individuals/early-journal-content>.

JSTOR is a digital library of academic journals, books, and primary source objects. JSTOR helps people discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content through a powerful research and teaching platform, and preserves this content for future generations. JSTOR is part of ITHAKA, a not-for-profit organization that also includes Ithaka S+R and Portico. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org.

lawn served as a further mark of identification. Dr. Carrel will install his hospital in Paris or the suburbs.

From the observation post in a front line trench it was reported that the bodies of two American soldiers were lying between the German and the British lines. A detachment of engineers had been in action for the first time a few days previously. For days they lay there; it was impossible to reach them. One night in the darkness a party of Tommies left the trenches. They carried spades instead of guns. It was a burial party in charge of a chaplain. The following morning the bodies of the two Americans were gone. A near-by shell hole had been filled up and on the top of it two white crosses marked the graves of the first Americans who had been buried in No Man's Land, where they had fallen fighting shoulder to shoulder with their British cousins for their convictions and their country's honor.

King George and Queen Mary invited a party of over a hundred officers and men from an American air squadron, now quartered in England, to visit Windsor Castle. After seeing some of the most interesting parts of the castle they had tea in St. George's Hall. Someone mentioned that it was in that very hall the Kaiser made his famous "Blood is thicker than water" speech. "Yes," said one of the guests, "and we come of British stock." The Princess Mary and ladies of the royal household waited on the visitors. The Princess celebrated her twenty-first birthday on April 26th.

The women of England are unwearying and indefatigable in their toil. By their labor nine-tenths of the shells manufactured are made. Everywhere, as the men go forth, the women silently take up their work. The business of the British and French is to hold the Hun armies until the United States can intervene with crushing force, and the women of both nations are doing their part.

---

THE SONG OF A SURGICAL DRESSING

I serve no King and I serve no State,
I'm the answer of Love to the song of Hate.
Or comrade or foe is one to me,
From tunnel or trench, or sky or sea.
When the last gun's fired and the war-flag's furled,
May I heal the hurt of a wounded world.

—Gerald J. Lively.